— The Reel

PLENTY of sport is to be had in catching the giant swordfish which frequent the waters around Santa Catalina, California. A rod is used of split bamboo, strong as steel but weighing only six ounces. Sometimes the fisherman needs as much as fifteen hundred feet of the finest nine-strand linen line. These fish are heavyweights and the one illustrated in the magazine is two hundred and four pounds.

Alon Bement reads character from the hands and among those whose characteristics he has evolved from the reading of the hand is Jacques Thibaut, one of the great living masters of the violin.

Dr. J. B. Figgins, of the Colorado Museum at Denver, has spent twenty years in searching for the fossil remains of a three-toed horse. Such are the demands of science.

There is an interesting exposition on the suction power of a vacuum and an animated at the end of this issue.
